

Art of the Brew kicking off for a third helping of art and beer

What does a sculpted likeness of Thirsty Planet look like? Or the painted essence of Pinthouse Pizza? And what will Jester King look like if label artist Josh Cockrell isn't depicting it?

Past Art of the Brew artwork has always been very creative, so expect more of the same fun installations this year.

The sublime mixture of art and beer known as Art of the Brew is returning for a third time this Saturday after pairing up Texas breweries with local artists to create pieces that reflect their beer and their backstories.

Started by Chris Whiteburch and Austin Nelsen in 2013 (<http://bitchbeer.org/2013/09/05/art-of-the-brew-fuses-art-with-beer/>), the event is becoming an annual Austin tradition, and it's not hard to guess why — locals love beer and quirky works of art just about equally. And isn't a good beer a form of art in itself, anyway?

On Saturday, expect an even bigger event this year. The Third Annual Art of the Brew, in addition to showcasing the finished pieces that each of the artists based around the breweries, will have beer tastings from the participating breweries, as well as food and live music starting at 3 p.m. at the Canopy arts complex on Springdale Road. (Bitch Beer will also have a booth, so stop by and see us! Our contributor Jessica Deahl is one of the artists representing the hopefully soon-to-open Blue Owl Brewing.)

The food, from Frank Hot Dogs, Wunder Pig BBQ and Sa-Ten, will be crafted to pair with what's on tap. The music includes Tahoma, the Avocados and Mamma K & the Shades. Although the event is technically free, a $20 donation will help the Art of the Brew organizers offset the costs of putting it together.

Here's the list of participating breweries and artists.
